Message from the Principal....

RAMBAM DAY SCHOOL'S NEW WEBSITE IS LIVE!!!RAMBAMDAYSCHOOL.ORG

We have had a wonderful first week and a half of school. When I walk around and see teachers and students smiling; I know things are going well.

Once a child begins going to school; school becomes a very integral part of their lives. Not necessarily because they see the importance; far more so because it takes up a good part of their day. The staff of Rambam Day School wants our students to appreciate, enjoy and understand the value of going to school. For this to be accomplished, both teachers and parents must be partners.

In school, through the enthusiasm and personal attention our staff gives our students, they will realize we believe what we are doing for them is important and valuable to their futures. When we praise them and redirect them when necessary; when we applaud their successes and assure them their “failures” are just minor setbacks, and when we shower them with our love and care – we are doing our part to impress upon our students that school is a very significant part of their lives for a very good reason.

We need our parents to work with us in the following ways (not limited to):

- When dropping your child off at school and when picking them up – in the AM, say goodbye, have a great day; in the PM, ask how are you? (not being on your cell phone while taking your child to school and picking them up certainly makes them feel important as you can focus on them and not sound half focused).
- After school, inquire about your child’s day in a way that gives them an avenue to respond in a constructive way: “Tell me what was the best part of your day”. “Tell me what part of your day did you find most challenging”. When we set the stage for a positive, constructive conversation, we lead our child/dren into a real conversation and hopefully not a griping session. As well, when we ask direct questions – “How do you feel you did on your math test today?” “Tell me the best part of your day”. – We show genuine interest. General questions like, how was your day, could sound like you’re just making conversation.
- Have a schedule so children know when you expect them to do their HW
- Try to be available to assist with your child’s HW if they need support. If you see a continuous need for support; please speak to their teacher and make them aware. It could be a real concern, or your child just needs reassurance, or they are using you as a crutch.
- Please don’t wait to contact your child’s teacher or the administration if you have a concern. Some concerns should be addressed immediately, and time makes a difference.
- Please address teachers respectfully and not accusingly; your child overhears more than you think. While I don’t believe children should feel their feelings don’t count and the teacher is always right; I do think it is crucial for children’s feelings to be validated and for them to hear from you that you believe in their teacher and there must be a “reason” and you’d like to speak to their teacher so you’ll know how you can best help them (your child), because you and the teacher are partners.

I hope these tidbits help. A positive experience both at home and in school makes the experience of school a constructive one.

Judaic Pre-School News

We are learning so much in RDS pre-school!

This week we had a special guest - Uncle Nosson Garfunkel came to blow the shofar for us and teach us all about it! Thank you Uncle Nosson!

Have a wonderful Shabbos

2Y News

We have a large class of ten students this year in 2y! You can imagine the effort it takes to make our little students as comfortable as possible. Since school has begun, we have made great progress on getting a routine in place. One of the beginning activities we completed, are the placemats for each child. enjoy the pictures of your child fully engaged in the process!

3Y News

We are having a great time in 3y. We are working on a lesson called, "All About Me". as part of the lesson, we enjoyed "painting the shape of our bodies".

Pre-K News

Every adult should have to go back to Pre-K every 5 years to be refreshed on all the basics of life; the importance of hand washing, sharing, not interrupting others while they speak, being joyful, showing kindness, and forgiving quickly! Miss Terri, Miss Janine, Yeshaya, Yaakov, Nitzevet, Yechiel, and Reuven Moshe are practicing all these things and still making time to have a luau as part of learning about things that start with the letter L. Every day is a new adventure with these Fab 5. Their smiles are contagious, as you can see!
